Hi, McCulties!

HAPPY TITLE REVEAL DAY!!!

Did the subject line get you? Imaoooo

If you saw the People Magazine interview, then you got an early, exclusive sneak peek (Also, can you believe that People Mag wanted to sit down and chat with me while I was in NYC?!)

If you missed the article, I had afternoon tea with their senior book editor Lizz and we talked about my cancer journey, why I love my readers (YOU), and all about Defying the Stars series coming your way at the end of this year.

PEOPLE sat down with the author in advance of the release of Beneath the Hood, out today, to talk about her process, how much she values her community of fans and the title of her new project — which PEOPLE can exclusively reveal.

I have a confession to make...

Starting a new series off the back of a very successful one is intimidating af. I doubt I'm alone as an author when I tell you that the anxiety of releasing a new series is scary.

What if no one reads it?

What if they expect more of the last series instead?

When you see me in person though, I will be faking it until I make it, and pretending like I knew all of you would love this new work all along.

So I'm here to reassure you, even though really it's just me word-vomiting my anxiety and soothing myself LOL

I promise that no matter what book of mine you read, you'll always get the signature Emily McIntire style of steam, slow burns, and seriously questionable morals.

This new book (and series) isn't dark romance in the sense of the main characters being villains... but everything I write has that grit to it and you know I love playing with shades of grey.

I hope you love it just as much as my other books, maybe even MORE than them (but don't you dare tell the others I said that.)

And I love you a lot. Thank you for coming on this journey with me.
